Program Contact: Kiku Jones (kiku.jones@qu.edu) 203-582-5040

Computer information systems is where business and technology meet. CIS graduates bridge the gap between IT and business needs. They possess the knowledge and skill to become effective managers, developers and users of information systems. The CIS program focuses on data analysis, teamwork, project management and system development using a "hands-on" learning approach with real-world applications and projects. Successful students have an interest in problem solving using technology, business and management.

Students who major in computer information systems are in high demand in the job market. They acquire advanced skills along with an understanding of the role information systems play in organizations. CIS graduates are prepared for careers as systems analysts, business analysts, database administrators, web designers, project managers or IT consultants.
